Broadstreet gets 40-year sentence for murder, neglect of 3-year-old

By LINDA STAHL
Courier-Journal Staff Writer

CORYDON, Ind. — A woman found guilty of murder and neglect in the starvation of her 3-year-old son was sentenced to 40 years in prison yesterday in Harrison Circuit Court.

Ruth A. Broadstreet, 29, had pleaded innocent by reason of insanity. But after a nine-day trial, a jury found her guilty but mentally ill on both charges on Jan. 22.

Her son, John Paul Broadstreet, was found dead on Sept. 7 in a trailer where he lived with his mother near Elizabeth in southern Harrison County. An autopsy showed he died of dehydration and malnutrition.

Yesterday Harrison Circuit Judge Scott T. Miller sentenced Miss Broadstreet to 40 years on the murder charge.

The sentence could have been as short as 30 years or as long as 60 years.

On the child-neglect conviction, Miller sentenced Miss Broadstreet to 10 years. The penalty range for that conviction is five to 20 years.

The two sentences are to run concurrently.

Miss Broadstreet told Miller that she was satisfied with her lawyer, court-appointed attorney Glenn Lawrence of English. She also told the court she didn't wish to appeal her convictions.

Because the jury returned the verdict of guilty but mentally ill, Miss Broadstreet will have to serve a prison sentence, but she has a right to treatment for any current mental illness. Lawrence requested that she be further evaluated, and Miller agreed.

It will be up to the Indiana Department of Correction to determine whether Miss Broadstreet needs treatment, and to provide it or see that the Department of Mental Health provides it.

Any time spent in a psychiatric facility will be credited toward her sentence.

FAA crash report indicates pilot error

By MIKE HUBER
Courier-Journal Staff Writer

A Federal Aviation Administration report to be filed this week indicates that a private plane crash-landed in southeastern Jefferson County last month because the pilot didn't switch from an empty fuel tank to a full one.

But the pilot, Terry Winders, senior vice president of First National Bank, said the real cause was a fuel leak.

The single-engine Piper Cherokee Six made an emergency landing on the Woodhaven Country Club golf course Jan. 28. Winders was flying his plane home from a business trip to Nashville, Tenn., with the bank's senior leasing officer, Wendell Atwater.

Neither man was injured, but the $24,000 plane was extensively damaged.

FAA inspector Bob Kidder said yesterday that he came up with three main findings during his investigation of the incident.

✓ "Sixteen ounces of fuel (less than the usable level) was in the main left tank, which the pilot stated he was running on."

✓ "The pilot stated he did not switch tanks."

✓ "A mechanical examination found nothing to indicate any other engine malfunction."

A Cherokee Six has four fuel tanks — a main tank and a tip tank in each wing. The pilot must manually switch tanks as the one he is flying on nears empty.

Kidder said his report will go to FAA officials and the National Transportation Safety Board.

The safety agency, he said, will then determine the probable cause of the accident. And the FAA will decide whether any regulations were violated and whether sanctions are warranted.

In an interview last night, Winders said Kidder's findings are correct. "But," he added, "they haven't determined why the tank was empty.

"We've proven the (25-gallon) tank was filled in Nashville. It's only about a 1-6-gallon flight; so we think it was a leak."

Winders, 39, said he didn't try to switch tanks because "I was only 1,000 feet above houses, and I probably wouldn't have had time."

In a Jan. 28 interview at the crash site, Winders said he was preparing to land at Bowman Field when the engine "fluttered and went out," and the plane began "coming down — fast."

He said he spotted the Woodhaven fairway and decided it was the best place for a forced landing. After he brought the plane down, it bumped and skidded about 75 feet, struck a tree and then plowed on for another 125 feet.

Man charged with grabbing loot Louisville robber dropped

Louisville police arrested a man yesterday and charged him with taking some money dropped on Monday by a fleeing bank robber.

Tommy H. Cunningham, 37, of the 4300 block of Vermont Avenue, has been charged with receiving stolen property over $100 and tampering with physical evidence.

According to Lt. Larry Cisa, a man who had robbed the Bank of Louisville branch at 626 W. Broadway dropped the loot after a dye bomb exploded in the money bag. Cisa said another man picked up two handfuls of the money and jumped into a car and drove off.

Cunningham was arrested at 43rd Street and Vermont Avenue. Police said an undetermined amount of money taken in the robbery was recovered.

Law-enforcement officials are still seeking suspects in that bank robbery and another later Monday at the United Kentucky Bank branch at 4940 Poplar Level Road.

Fire-training smoke wasn't tainted, lab tests show

Laboratory tests have determined that the Pepper Fogger that made some Buffalo County firefighters ill during a training exercise in December was not contaminated, according to state Fire Marshal Gilbert Ellis.

The Southeast Bullitt Volunteer Fire Department was conducting training on how to remove victims from a smoke-filled room when firefighter Maria Sadler, who was playing the part of a victim, began to cough and complained of a headache and chest pains.

When medical technicians examined others taking part in the exercise they found several with increased pulse rates and high blood pressure. Ms. Sadler and 16 others were taken to hospitals, but she was the only one admitted.

The fire marshal's office provided the smoke-generating device for the training session.

Ellis said, "Apparently the person who played the part of the victim got overexposed to the smoke, and some of the other firemen who became ill had breathed some of this material before they put on their masks."
